THE KING HAS DIED!

Horrifying homicide! This morning our country was shaken by a appalling stroke of fate: The king is dead!

Our hearts are wounded, fear and grief are covering our country in a dark veil. Last Night our beloved King Duncan the Second (Donnchad mac Maíl Coluim) has been brutally murdered.

He was found this morning by Macduff, a close confidante of the King. Was he the one who killed him out of greed?

The evidence speaks against it, because the murder weapon, a blood-smeared dagger (see picture), was found near the guards. However, they have been killed by Macbeth, a loyal general, already because they wanted to attack him.

Macduff found them when he went to visit the king. He suspects Macbeth who indicnantly states that he was sleeping at the time. But is he telling the truth? Other suspects are the King's sons Malcolm and Donalbain. They would now ascend the throne, however they have fled Scotland. Was it out of a guilty conscience? Or out of fear of being caught? It is definitely suspicious.

The mourning ceremony was held today with his closest family members, at least the ones that are still in the country (see picture).

In any case, we will stay well informed for you in this mysterious murder case.

WHAT IS KING MACBETH HIDING? THE NEW KING - A MASS MURDERER?

Yesterday evening Macbeth, who is now to follow in Duncan's footsteps, held a banquet. Added to this is the inexplicable behavior of the king last night. There is every indication that Macbeth has his hands in it. The people's assumptions cannot be rejected, the only question is who else will banquet to celebrate his coronation. All noblemen were invited. However, it was striking that his good friend Banquo did not appear.

At first everyone spent a peaceful evening, drinking and celebrating. But suddenly everything started to turn around, all of a sudden Macbeth collapsed and started behaving strangely. He spoke to someone who was obviously not in the room and none of the people present could explain the behavior of the future king.

He was bathed in sweat and, according to the stories, seemed like in another world, panic broke out in him, which also worried some of the guests.

Some claim he had hallucinations. Finally, his wife husband ended up reassuring, as well as the guests. She explained it all with a disease that Macbeth is said to suffer from. But she too seemed to become restless. Most of you have probably already noticed the curious incident on the evening of the Macbeth banquet. The death of the old king came unexpectedly, good old King Duncan, who ruled our country with heart and goodwill!

and looked suspicious. Finally, she ended the meeting and made the guests leave the banquet. People were confused about what they had just heard and it is possible to make assumptions. . . Does Macbeth have anything to do with the death of old King Duncan? What is the new king hiding? Is he really capable of running a country?

The consequences of his event are doubts and concerns among the people. Many suspect Macbeth and his wife even as a regicide. It all fits together! Unexpectedly the oh so good king of our country dies, who at that time was a guest in the estate of his successor. . . Shortly afterwards Macbeth holds his banquet, everyone is invited, only the one closest to him is not. One could assume that Banquo was in cahoots with Macbeth and therefore avoided meeting him, but some sources also report his death, which is inexplicable.

He die.

MOVING FOREST?

Do the trees of Birnam Forest really have feet or was everything just an illusion of the gone mad Macbeth?

This morning reached us some interesting details about yesterday's happenings. Right before the life changing battle of England and Scotland the king Macbeth seemed undefeatable and overconfident about his win. Though it was said that days before everything went down three witches proclaimed to Macbeth three prophecies. One of them being that he shall never be defeated until Birnam Wood marches to fight him at Dunsinane Hill where his castle is.

We heard from our confidential source from the castle that Macbeth kept on talking nonsense about the forest and how this prophesy could never in his life be real since trees can't walk.

Nonetheless we got the news from a messenger that literal trees were on their way to Dunsinane Hill yesterday evening. Obviously we couldn't believe either that the forest moved so I was sent into the woods this noon to check on the trees. I couldn't find anything suspicious about the trees despite some of them having leg-like tree trunks. But another thing I saw that was quite suspicious was this old woman that fit to the description of the witches that Macbeth gave.

I didn't have the chance to talk to her since she was gone once I turned around. For an old woman she seemed strangely fast. But her appearance also fit to any old woman living in the surrounding villages so I didn't think much about it.

Speaking about the other villagers we made a survey if any one saw something suspicious going on yesterday evening but most of them were in their houses fearing the ongoing battle and its consequences.

Whether Birnam forest really moved or it simply was an illusion of the gone mad Macbeth, he was defeated. Seems like the witches prophesy was right.

Cheers to the moving forest!

Caught The Queen Sleepwalking!

Lady Macbeth has once again become the topic of conversation due to dubious sleepwalking and thus raises many questions. Last night, on August 12th, disruptive noises rang out in the Castle of Dunsinane.

Shortly afterwards, the domestic doctor was called by the gentlewoman, a faithful helpmate who already had to observe strange behaviour of Lady Macbeth the previous days. After that both have no other choice than watch the Queen not only talk about bizarre things, but also demonstrate questionable gestures.

To give you an idea of the situation, she is said to have entered the room with a candle in her hand without wearing any kind of clothes.

According to the eyewitnesses, Lady Macbeth then started to rub her hands incessantly as if she were washing them while saying "out damned spot".

The horrified doctor and gentlewoman then watched as she seems to relive past conversations before she hears an imagery knocking and rushes off to bed.

The doctor not only claims that the Queen's disease is beyond his power to cure, but also that "unnatural deeds" must be the cause to those abnormal problems he has just observed.

However, the event has quickly come to public attention and is now worrying many citizens of the Scottish Kingdom. Some people are worried and wonder what might be wrong with their beloved Queen, others find her behavior so suspicious that they blame her for the worst deeds a human being can commit.

Rumors are now circulating that during her trance she has revealed details of the death of King Duncan and the general Banquo, while in addition pointing out excerpts from the life with her husband, our dearest King Macbeth.

Could these accusations actually be of truth or are they just, as it is often the case, stories of lies?

Hopefully, this will be cleared up soon and the answer will finally shed light upon the matter.
