Can you be warhero and loving husband at the same time?

For years, Macbeth and Lady Macbeth have been our sparkling couple. But has the flame of their love died out at last?

As their tenth wedding anniversary is approaching the thane of Glamis and his wife's marriage seems to have hit some bumps on the road.

Reportedly, the Lady has been spotted leaving Dunsinane Hill unaccompanied several times during her husband's latest interference with the bloody war against the Norwegian kingdom. According to our sources inside the castle of the Macbeths', she has been frequently visiting her husband's dearest friend Lord Barold in his own home.

Apparently, the thane of Dellow and the Lady have been getting closer since his wife has passed away several months ago, to a point where it seems a platonic friendship is not all they share.

"Lady Macbeth has rarely seen her husband. She doesn't only miss him, but any company in general", a close friend of the family informs us. "The war and as a consequence his constant absence has driven her straight into Lord Barold's arms."

And then there remains the matter of children. For years now, their marriage has been fruitless, and Lady Macbeth is said to have grown impatient. The pressure on her is rising and she seems to be aware that her husband could easily replace her should she not deliver him any babies soon. Still, the fault might not lie with her, our source tells us. Rumours have risen that it is indeed the thane of Glamis himself that could be held responsible for the non-existent heir.

Either way, the marriage of the Macbeths' seem to hang on a threat. We can only hope that they rekindle their love once Macbeth has returned from battle and that no other war will threaten their marriage any time soon.

THE APOKALYPSE: Is God punishing us?

Everyone in Scotland is aware of it: yesterday night - more precisely from 9p.m. to 6a.m. - we were witnesses of the strangest weather phenomens for centuries.

The Scottish weather is always a little confusing but yesterday night it was different : We had storm, thunder, rain, hail, lighting and fog. From all over the country we heard reports about dangerous situations. People had to be really careful because of flying objects and trees, a horse was injured by flying shoes, a squirrel flew through one's window. It was really terrifying.

Many farmers see this as a bad sign, they're talking about the world's ending, about an apocalypse. God wants to punish us for all our sins. Nobody is secure anymore. Even the noblemen had problems : it was reported that a tower of an old castle collapsed and Castle Billwood announced that they lost they're bear. Everyone who lives around there has to be careful and is requested to inform the castle's workers if they find it. Obviously they can't entertain you without one so if you want to visit Castle Billwood you have to wait a little longer.

Everyone and every part of Scotland was and is affected by the latest weather phenomens and evidently it's a punishment for something that has happend. To say it's about the end of the world is a little overdramatic. To say it for sure we have to wait.

Macbeth: Our Last Hope

In the bloody slaughter of our glorious empire and the empire of Norway there has been a lot of action:

the troops of Duncan have almost been expunged and there were only a few of the soldiers left so to that point it seemed as if there was no glimpse of chance for the Scottish kingdom to win the battle anymore. Macdonwald and his Lady Luck had already turned around to leave the battlefield with such a confidence of victory.

But then -in the least expected moment- there came a single man of Duncan's riding on his horse ,in a neverseen pace, towards Macdonwald right across the field and fought and chopped his whole way through the soldiers of Macdonwald. It turned out that the man had been the fearless Macbeth who just could not give up to his country yet. When he reached the battlefield's other side no one believed what they saw: right before Macdonwald could even turn his head around, Macbeth, who came right behind him, split him up from the bottom to the top almost as if it was nothing. They were all so shocked that no one could even barely move.

But Macbeth, riding back to his troop in a major glory and feeling of happiness, could not see that the remaining Norwegian King recognised his chance and sent out fresh troops with new weapons. But that did not scare the brave Macbeth and he put all of his last effort into killing them with even twice as much force as he did when he killed Macdonwald.

At last, the Scottish empire has won this sanguinary battle. Macbeth is THE hero everywhere in Scotland and deserves enormous rewards for being such a selfless and militant fighter for our kingdom.

Death of our glorious King Duncan?

Rumors are floating around the death of King Duncan. Two days ago there was a big tumult in Macbeth's castle, through insider information we got the news that there were several dead.

Our beloved King Duncan has been unseen for two days. There were no photos of him nor have there been any witnesses who have seen him. The last time he was seen alive was two days ago at dinner in Macbeth Castle in ... but since then he has disappeared without a trace.

Remarkably, there was no public statement from Macbeth and Lady Macbeth, although he was last alive with them. Our reporters found this suspicious and we have continued to investigate at this point. But unfortunately, Lady Macbeth blocked any contact with us. She does not respond to letters or invitations to our interviews. As already mentioned unusual.

Fortunately, a guard who works in the castle was immediately ready to talk to us. The man was on guard on that special night. According to him, it was a very crazy night. He and his colleague heard a lot of noise, such as foot pattering or loud breathing. Besides, the animals seemed to be going crazy, owls made noises as loud as they had never before.

Very early in the morning, he happened to witness an extremely unusual situation. He watched two men carrying three corpses on deckchairs towards the forest. According to his statement, they seemed very anxious not to be seen by anyone, which is why he stayed in the background.

The next day all guards except the most loyal servants were sent on a two-week forced leave!
